I am disappointed by the Department of Justice's cave-in on the ruling of Microsoft's Anti-trust case. Once again, the government panders to big business at the expense of the ordinary citizen and a free-market economy. A product should fail or succeed on the overall value not by the marketing and strongarm tactics of the company pushing the product. Microsoft's practices as taught to me by our school system are in the same vein of anti-competition and monopoly as the Vanderbilts and the IBM of old. Once again the case of do as we say and not as we do is enforced by the system. The case of money makes right is spoken to the new generations of American children by your ruling. Thank you for making me disbelieve the American Justice even more than before.
